SKETCH OF THE FIRST DAY'S DEBATE.

chair. For one, he confessed he had been greatly gratified at the self-respect which the house had manifested in the conrse this subject had received. He did think, he said, that, Monuments of Paris, Views of the City and Bay of Naples, with an elegant representation of Mount Vesuviews of the City and Bay of Naples, with the sale and the session, he would not say an improper but an unnecessary degree of zeal had been displayed in taking up the subject that received. He did think, he said, that, at the commencement of the session, he would not say an improper but an unnecessary degree of zeal had been displayed in taking up the subject that received. He did think, he said, that, this subject; and he had been highly gratified in finding that the house had determined that the subject should take that dispassionate course which belonged to its character.

He did not agree, he said, with gentlemen, several of whom had expressed an opinion on this occasion &a former, that the dissatisfac tion expressed through the country in regard to this law, was to be attributed wholly to faction, to demagogues, or designing men. Some of it perhaps might: but when we find, in all parts of the country, even in those having no intercourse with each other, a general dissat isfaction, we are bound to conceive that the people are really opposed to the measure.

Mr. C said he agreed perfectly in the senti ment, that instructions given by the people are obligatory on the representatives. This was a principle consecrated by the revolution, in-separable from all free governmnt, and which he therefore hoped never to see departed from n practice under ours. It was indeed, like all other general principles, regulated by certain limitations. An instruction to violate the constitution for instance, is not binding-why Because the expression of the will of the people in the constitution is paramount to the expression of their will in the form of instruc tions, and because the representative is sworr to obey that paramount will. But, on ques tions of expediency, the will of the people ought to be binding; and, if there was a question, more than any other, in regard to which the popular will should be obeyed, it is that in which the representatives are called upon to fix their own compensation; in which they are a party on one side, and the people on the other. Every consideration of proprie ty and delicacy, as well as of principle, re quired that, where the opinion of the constit-uent in regard to compensation is decidedly expressed, it is to be received as conclusive and implicitly obeyed. Whilst, then, he had a seat on this floor, Mr. C said, it was immaterial how he arrived at the will of his con stituents, or what were the evidences of it t was sufficient that he should know it; in all cases of expediency he held the doctrine of an obligation on his part to observe the in structions, express or implied, of his constitu ents. Cases might possibly arise, in which he should not feel himself bound by instructions to deviate from the course which be con eeived to be correct-where, for example, im portant facts existed materially varying the case, of which his constituents had been ignorant. In such a case, he might throw himself on the liberality and justice of the people to determine, under the whole circumstances whether he had acted correctly or not. What is the will of the people of his particular dis-trict of his constituents, ought, on this subject, to be the question for every member The people, Mr. C. said, whom he had the por or to represent, were he hoped he should not be accused of arrogance in saying so—were a people high minded, independent, jealous of their honor and their liberty, but at the same time, I beral and just; and so also, he doubted not, were all the people of the United States In regard to that district, he believed that the people would be satisfied with any liberal compensation to the members of Congress, twelve dollors per day—At the last session, Mr C. said, he had stated his preference for a daily compensation over a fixed salary or gross amount per session, but that the reasons urged in favor of the latter mode were so plausible if not convincing, as to be sufficient to war, and every constituted and the experiment of that plan which if found unsatisfactory or inexpedient, it would States down to the Printer's devil, had had it be always in the power of Congress to repeal In advocating the return from a salary to a daily but increased compensation, at the same time that he conformed to the will of his constituents, he did not vary the grounds on which he had acted at the last session The idea of the salary mode of compensation being so alarming in its consquences as had been described, was, Mr. C. said, a very novel All who recollected the debates in the conventions on the Constitution-in that of Virginia, for instance, would remember that all parties treated the clause, respecting the compensation of members of Congress, as contemplating a salary, using that identical plurase. Patrick Henry, speaking of a salary, hoped that the members would not fix their salary at an unreasonable rate. Mr. Grayson and the late Gov. Tyler took the other side and said their fears were that Congress would fix it at so low a rate that only the wealthy would be able to defray the expense of attendlead this government to a species of oligarchy. Notwithstanding, however, the idea of power of Congress, as they deemed expedient, to fix their compensation in one or the other form having been coeval with the instrument under which they ect, Mr. C. said he preferred daily compensation, because it was more and under the other, as it regards the memse sessions are of long duration, receiving no more than him who serves in a Congress whose sessions are of short duration. There was in fact no way to make the compensation perfectly equal, but to make it daily

It became this House, on the present occa-sion, Mr. C. said, to deliberate, to act calmly and deliberately. He would not, he said, examine the causes of dissatisfaction from Maine mine the causes of disaction from Maine to Georgia, from the shores of the Atlantic to the remotest west; whether it had arisen from misconstruction of the act, from want of information as to the considerations which made, agree; but there are some subjects on which the gentleman sustained we are better qualified to give than to receive instruction. Any man, who has had experience of public life in this place, is better able to ceived, Mr. R. said he would not meet his

The result of all In that part of the country, where it was not that I heard was a conviction on my mind, that torious that wealth was not accumulated as in the people remain dissatisfied with the form, others, how would they, Mr. R. asked, be able of the compensation of the members, proportionate to the depreciation of money, or, what is the same thing, to the increase in the price of commodities since 1789. For his part then, bers from the greatest distance certainly. If, then, the mileage be increased, in the same ratio with the daily pay, the greatest benefit will be bestowed where there is the greatest

Mr. C. concluded by saying, he did not think this a very important question, and he should not therefore longer detain the attention of the committee. He had thought himself bound to assign the reasons for the vote he should give, and should vote with cheerfulness for he sum proposed by the committee or for

That if a sentiment exist in the public mind, and gration which had been referred to. He it, the opulent nabib on the one hand, and the din his band, he said, the authority on the state and condition of England-and here we had proceeded pari passu—that by means of the press the means which exists in the heart of the body politic, is propagated and diffused to its remotest extremi ies. In this way the present public indignation, if it did exist, had been excited. Gentlemen, Mr. R. said he had another objection to this bill—that it contained no provision for additional compensation to the Speaker of this House. [Mr. R. having been corrected in this impression, continued thus:] He had misapprehended the bill; and that a provision to allow him twice the amount allowed to had spoken of their districts; he would speak of his. It had been for some time past a sort in his especial care, and yet, he was hold to say, that in that district such a sentiment as the Speaker represented to prevail throughout the United States, did not exist. To the cause he had mentioned, was to be attributed graceful fact!) the public excitement which was represented to exist. The people of the United States, Mr. R said, were, as they had been represented to be, a virtuous high-m nded people. They had borne, and would ever continue to bear, burthens and privations of the most enormous and distressing kind, so as they were convinced, rightly or not, that the public weal required them. They had borne the embargo—they had borne the miserable non-importation system—they had borne a long, bloody, destructive, and some respects, disastrous war-they had borne with misman agement in the Camp and in the Senate, and they would ever bear with it, so long as they believe that the intentions of those clothed with power, have been honest and

But we are told, said Mr. R. that this is a matter of money; that the whole report of the select committee on the subject, is about money. And about what did the committee report! The subject matter of their report was money; and what other subject should they have spoken of? Would the gentleman have had them talk of fortifications, of milisimple, more conformable to the usages of the states, besides being more equal and more just in its operation in regard to the members at different times. For, although, if we take a series of years, the result, as it respects the public, will be the same under the one mode and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the other series are sufficient to the major and mides the mides the sufficient to the major and mides the sufficient to the major and mides the bers serving in that series, the result will be unequal, the member serving in a Congress whose esserving are a close described by the corne from the corne gress, suffer most. For, he said, he had no hesitation in saving that the of commodities since 1789. For his part then, Mr. C. said, he had a disposition to do justice to the members, as well as to the people. If the compensation were reduced so low as that none but opulent men could aspire to seats in this House, the evil produced by the fathers of the constitution would be realized; and all the middling class of society, that in which the weight of talents is to be found in this country, would be banished from the legislative councils.
> Mr. C. said, that, under such impressions, he should vote for a higher compensation than six dollars per day. He felt indifferent whether it should be now fixed at eight, nine or ten dollars; confident, whichever sum should ten dollars; confident, whichever sum should be agreed to, that not only the people of the district which he represented would approve, but that the whole American people would at the last session, I would see the proposition of the present session, I would see that the last session, I would see the proposition of t district which he represented would approve, but that the whole American people would sanction the measure by their approbation. He differed from an honorable gentleman from New York, with regard to an increase of the mileage. He thought that also ought to be increased; 6.7, he asked, who makes the greatest sacrifice in coming here? The members from the greatest distance certainly. If ours? He spoke of the subordinate officers, the military and naval officers particularly; Had any appeal been made, not to say to the generosity but to the prodigality of this House, in their favor, without being favorably answered? How many bills had passed to make good to the captors of ships of war, the amount, and the enormous amount too, of vessels destroyed? How many men of the naval and military have been elevated from poverty to affluencea and splender! Are we about to affirm, said he, il at the representatives on this floor, are the only degraded cast in this society, when the emoluments of herits of the bill to be before the House on the present question, which he had not before understood to be the case, proceeded to dever his views of it.
> The question, he said, had assumed a challength of the billion of the continuous characteristics of the billion of the continuous c for executive approintments. God forbid, said he, that the time should ever come that this House should be regarded as the mere stepping stone to other offices -as the ladder to be kicked from under the aspirant, when That if a sentiment exist in the public mind, it is immaterial in what manner manifested, it is entitled to weight, he agreed: but he was not prepared either to affirm or deny that the sentiment which the gentleman had said pervaded the whole continent, was the ruling sentiment. In what manner had it been excited? The horrable member had said that in all parts of the country, however disconnected with one another, there existed but one opinion in relation to the law This country, said Mr R. is, or was but lately, divided into two great parties, which possessed complete and efficient control over the press. No sooner did the law of the last session pass, than both parties stared in the race of popularity to run down that law. To this fact must be attributed the general sentiment of indignation which had been referred to. He > > to allow him twice the amount allowed to other members was contained in the bill. That compensation, he said, was not adequate to the character and condition of the presisaid he, of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, my mind naturally reverts to the Onslow's of England and the Peyton Ran-dolphs of America I look to a man who ought to possess talents of no despicable ort; who ought to have parliamentary law at least at his finger's ends; who ought to be the grave and dignified moderator of an assembly of a great and august character—for such it is, and little they know of it who deem of it less reverently. Never let me see for such it is, and little one, deem of it less reverently. Never let me see a man in that chair, who is a partizan on the and an umpire there. The Speaker of this House and the President of the Senate ought to have a compensation commensurate with the dignity of their stations. Why have we given to Hull, Decatur, Jones, to Scott, Brown, and other worthies in the public employ, ample compensation? because we expect them to live like gentlemen, and the members of this House are to live-like blackguards If he was not mistaken, the amount compensation granted to a brigadier was double that which is allowed to a member of this House, if he was wrong in this, let it be

> > With respect to public sentiment, said Me. R. permit me to say that, in that ancient and respectable state of which I am an unworthmember, an indication has been given of the ublic sentiment which I hail as auspicious to he course which I trust will finally be taken A resolution, soon after the meeting of the House of Burgesses of Virginia, had been popped on the table, by some eager bidder at the auction of popularity—whom he knew not, and cared not—expressing strong disapproba-tion of the act of Congress now proposed to be repealed. That honorable body had acted with dignity which became them, as they always ave acted, and he trusted always would they laid the resolution on the table, and have ever since Jused o take itup—and there it lies nailed, has oad money on the counter—and with his consent and good will so should lie this bill. And why? He perfectly appreciated the motives of the gentleman from Kentucks who had brought in this bill; but it was not practicable to act in obedience to that public

Speaker, that they should define question with sobriety, impartiality and dignity—not so much as to the question before the House, as on every occasion which comes before this body—because such conduct was due to the body itself. He trusted that this house to the body itself. He trusted that this house the manifested, if the amount had not been manifested. would pursue one or the other of two courses; that it would pursue one or the other of two courses; that it would permit the matter to sleep, and leave it to be settled by those who rode into he should blush, he said, that this house, actuated by public sentiment, should act at all on the subject, and fall short of making the most ample and complete restitution. For the sake of the character of this house for consistency, the bill ought not to pass in the present shape. What will the public say? These very compensation, with some of the officers of governments. ency, the bill ought not to pass in the present shape. What will the public say? These very demagogues and infuriated partizans, what will they say? That you have made a most ungracious and hame amende to the public. We can do nothing properly, said Mr. R. but leave the subject where it is, and let our successors, howsoever and for whatsoever elected, act under the impulse by which they were chosen. The first was, upon this occasion, Mr. R. said, as an American citizen, I have a right to demand The fact was, upon this occasion, Mr. R. said, that those who had labored to excite the public mind, had not labored in vain. The misting the passage of this law which show the inexthe mind, had not labored in vain. The mischief he said, was done. It was thought a fine theme of dec anation, and taken up accordingly by the prostituted presses of both factions of the country; but that excitement had in a great degree subsided. Mr. R. spoke of the importance of preserving the character of this house. We (said he) have nothing to give—we hold no levees—we have no retainers, no chents—the representatives are accountable homially to their constituents, from which orbeen ally to their constituents, from which or-deal I feel no disposition to shrink, but which detracts semething from value of a seat in this house, or we should not so often see members, house, or we should not so often see members dence of discussing on all cases, which we had who have served their country with fidelity, perhaps with ability, are to be hunted down in their districts with every little matter percaining the law was, that our compensation had ing rather to the ministerial administration of this house than to affairs of great national con-cerument, what will be the consequence? Who will accept a seat on this floor on these conditions? What man, he asked, would come, sep arating himself from his family, to live in nar row lodgings in this most uncomfortable and expensive place in the whole world—if he is to called to severe account, for a vote, no upon questions of war, embargo, taxes, public debt, &c. but for giving the door keeper a hundred dollars extra at the end of a session, or

One objection had been made to his motion,

It has lately been remarked by an hon gentlemant that it might not perhaps be in the power of the sorry, he said, to think such was the situation. He should be sorry, he said, to think such was the situation of the sorry, he said, to think such was the situation of the sorry he sorr that this House is not the lavorite with the Attion of any honorable member on this floor—he believed it was not. If not in his power at present, it would be to every man hereafter—and he would hold it as a debt of the highest digmity, as a debt of honor, to be first paid. If ting the good things of the government (as some there should be any one of this house in that predicament, in what respect would be differ the consider them.) The enquiry then you can make is in the condition of the people. Is, is the compensation law of the last session unpopular; is it odious to the great body of the American people? I think it has become so.—
To decide this point, I shall not rely upon the intemperate resolves of self-created clubs or assemblies. I shall not trouble you with the impotent presentments of grand juries, however in other respects benerable. Mr. Hulbert said that the general had been charged with unjust and oppressive conduct if relation to the contractors in the army under his command. He said he was entirely satisfied that the General had interfered only in those cases, where he thought his duty to ke public imperiously required it. In saying this, he meant to cast no imputation upon the contractors; he spoke only of what he believed to be the motives of Gen. Harrison

The most serious accusation against the General was, that, while he was commander in chief in the west, regardless of the command of the report of the conduct in the contractors and provided in the said that the general had been should indemnify the class of citizens, of in justice, demands that the government of age, had on when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity, which the government of the cannot wish then government of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she went away, a check continuity of age, had on, when she wen
